Seeking a clearer view

When you have a cataract in one or both eyes, your world looks different. Things you see are not as bright as they used to be. Your vision becomes cloudy or hazy. Some people say it is like looking through a foggy or smudged window. Cataract surgery can restore clear vision and bring your world back into focus.

It is up to you to decide when you are ready for cataract surgery. If you are only mildly bothered by slightly hazy or yellowed vision, you might not be ready for surgery. When you have trouble doing things you like or need to do, cataract surgery can help.
